A SONG OF FOUR SEASONS.

She gave me when the bud-burst spring

When I was a young man I fell in love, as young men generally do, with the girl who came handiest. This particular girl happened to be Belle Burton, and I devoted myself to her—rode with her, beated with her (it was a country place where we met), walked with her, talked with her, hegged her for the roses she wore in her hair, and tried in vain (for I was no poet) to make sonnets not only to her "eyebrows," but to her hair, her cheeks and her lily-white hands. In fact, I went through the pretty dream of first love as most young people do, and it ended, as it generally does, in an unpleasant awakening.

One day the stage arrived at the hotel with a dozen dashing New Yorkers for passengers. The next, one of them obtained an introduction to Belle Burton. There was no doubt whatever that he was handsemer than men usually are, or that?

"Yee," I answered.

"So I have written to her, I do not want her to see me, and I shall go abroad in a level or one me, you know. I have loved her very much. I always shall; and this is terrible hard."

He broke down entirely there, and took a letter from his bosom and put it into my di tolder from whom I came and gave her the missive. She read it through gravely, in the yea that had such a solemn, her of the with a dozen dashing New Yorkers for passengers. The next, one of them obtained an introduction to Belle Burton.

There was no doubt whatever that he was handsemer than men usually are, or that?"

"Yem," I answered.

"Me broke down entirely there, and took the utrue daway. I went straight to Belle Burton. I found her in the garden, and I le week or so, and—you? I tell her you've me, or law week or so, and—you? I tell her you've me, or law week or so, and—suly and the week or so, and—suly and the week or so, and—suly and the set wery much. put myself out of the way of hourly tor-ture, but I did not do so wisely. I linger-ed about the place and did small things to pite the happy pair—intruded on the ete-a-tetes, managed to force the society tete-a-tetes, managed to force the society of some excellent and loquacious matron or some troublesome child upon them, looked daggers of contempt at him and forgot to pass the butter to her. At last a grand chance to anuoy him occurred. He was a good rider and proud of his accomplishment, and had a restive, nervous animal which he boasted no one could ride but himself. I had heard him declare busself a perfect master of the creature. Application for rates to clubs should be made only to the office of the Company in New Orleans. rode away with an air I used to wish for an artist with a white umbrella. I desired to see that fellow unseated and ingloriously turned into the mud. That would have made me happy; and once when he had offeuded me more than ever by his gallant style of riding I sauntered out into the field-cursing him in my immost soul—when what should I spy in the middle —when what should I spy in the middle of the grass, intent upon a bunch of clover, but a fat pre-Raphaelite artist in a white suit, a flapping hat and a white sketching umbrella that would have frightened the clergyman's gray mare, who was nearly as old as himself, into being a runaway.

I rushed toward this artist with enthusiasm. I took off my hat to him. I said:

"Sir, I rejoice that one of your glorious profession has at last visited us. You love the minnte I see. Have you noticed the

I suppose she had never cared anything about me, but she had sirted with me man she loves is the one no woman ever filts with. With Arnold she was rather graver than with most men, but her cyes sparkled as he approached her. She bushed when his name was mentioned, and cared for nothing in which he had not some share. In fact, it was as plain that she was in love with him as that he was devoted to her, and there was no doubt Is any one's mind that all this would end in a wedding.
